About the Author

Chisom Ulasi is a proud wife and mother. She is a Level Three Early Years Practitioner and Educator. She has also taught Sunday school, creche, parents and toddler's groups, schools and was a baby room lead in a nursery. She is the founder of ChiKiddie Foundation.

She has over seven years of experience working with babies and young children.

She is on a mission to fulfil her life purpose, which is to bring children to the kingdom of God through the teachings of the word of God.

The story behind this book

My son is of age and understands things very well. He has been talking much more about what his friends say to him, both good and bad. I encouraged him as a good parent should through positive confessions: "I believe that there is power in our mouths."

So, I got him to meditate more on who God says he is rather than what friends say he is.

I was led to write this book to help other children know who they are in Christ, that is their true identity and to build their faith in God.

Introduction

Welcome to "I Am Who God Says I Am," a powerful compilation affirmative words based on biblical lessons. It was created specifically for children.

This book aims to instill in young minds the self-assurance, belief, love, and value that comes from realising one's identity in God.

Children will strengthen their feelings of self and gain a deeper knowledge of faith by integrating affirmations with applicable Bible verses.

Each chapter is crafted to inspire, uplift, and empower young hearts to embrace their true value and purpose towards becoming who God has created them to be.
